I want to populate the dropdown list with employees based on value of CompanyID. A: I suggest to use ViewModel and use the ViewBag.Model property. Let say your view model is called EmployeeViewModel, then you could do: @Html.DropDownList("Employees", new SelectList(ViewBag.Companies, "Value", "Text"), new { id = "employees" }) and now EmployeeViewModel will be populated in this SelectList. I would strongly recommend to do the binding at the model instead of at the view, this can easily make your views less coupled and easier to test. Q: Using Referenceable to compare with a list of model objects I am trying to create a custom finder that allows me to load an array of Referenceable objects and then perform a one-to-many comparison. The problem is, I'm not really sure how to do it. I'm trying to use Referenceable to compare against an array, like the following: $user = (User) $this->Referenceable; // Get the $list array of references $list = $this->service->findByReference($user); // Check if the User in the array exists if (array_intersect_key($list, array($user)) != false) { $user->updateAttribute 648931e174

I need to get the information from the buttons on the remote control of my Android TV via a Bluetooth connection. It is not a problem to enable the Bluetooth for the settings menu of the remote control: But I have no idea how I can access the buttons on the remote control. I know that there is a java library for this, but I have no idea how to use it. A: The device contains an Android TV and not just Android. It therefore cannot be controlled by a generic Android application but a remote control specific one should do the job. Look at this excellent list of remote controls available for Android TV: I see you can take a look at the android-remote control library that is written for a similar purpose but it is old. Have a look at the list of projects here: I hate pain. It makes me so mad. I hate it. If it doesn't go away, there has to be something more powerful. Yes, you read right. I said, 'powerful'. I am tired of being powerless. I am tired of my life being hell and it hasn't even been over a year since my accident. From the very beginning, I have strived to write, only writing. I liked that I didn't have to be in the public eye, that I was hiding inside myself. But I became a different person
